Editorial Review

Review

In Planning for Place and Plexus, Levinson and Krizek [provide] a comprehensive and compelling framework for understanding the relationships between transportation and land use.

Susan Handy

University of California-Davis --Journal of Transport and Land Use 1:2 (Fall 2008) pp. 183–185

Like masters, the authors easily move back and forth between specifics and generalizations, while never forgetting to bring their readers along.

Bonnie J. Johnson

University of Kansas --Journal of the American Planning Association, Autumn 2009, Vol. 75, No. 4

'A lively, engaging book...which uses neoclassical economic principles...in a digestible format. The authors go so far as to draw from the film "Thelma and Louise" to show how game theory can be applied in predicting whether someone will drive or take public transit. This provocative, highly relevant book deserves to be on the bookshelf of everyone concerned with urban planning and transportation.'

Robert Cervero, Professor and Chair

Department of City and Regional Planning

University of California, Berkeley
